

Deep budget cuts and mass layoffs mean there are fewer staff to maintain the parks and assist guests. These cuts could pave the way for private companies to exploit public lands.

Tourism in the parks helps local economies. Their beauty is an inspiration to artists, musicians, and writers.

And right now, these priceless places really need our help.

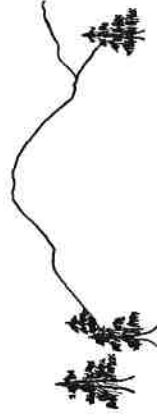

So, what can we do? If you live near a National Park and are able to, you can volunteer to care for trails or campgrounds, educate guests, or participate in citizen science.

Our national parks are habitats for many animal and plant species, including endangered species.

They're also home to old-growth forests, which help to curb climate change and keep air and water clean.

You can call or write to your reps and ask them to protect our public lands. Democracy.io has an easy-to-use form. You can protest. Many protests in support of the parks are happening across the US.

Protect Our  National Parks

If you're financially able, you can donate to orgs like the National Park Foundation. You can share news about the parks, or make art about them. Let's all do our part to make sure our parks are around forever!

For more info:
resistancerangers.org
wilderness.org
ourparks.org
altspnps.org

a zine by Manatee
<https://callmemanatee.neocities.org>
March 2025